Not illustrated. 1821 Excerpt: ...and are regularly paid a fixed sum per day. Hanover, as a kingdom, is open on all sides to an invading enemy; and, when negotiation fails, its independence can only be maintained by a well organized military force, and a close and cordial alliance with England. The duke of Cambridge, with the title of governor-general of the kingdom, is also commander-in-chief of the army; but the military, as well as the civil concerns of Hanover, are directed by the cabinet ministers, who, as a body, represent the absent sovereign. The present military force consists of a regiment-of foot and two brigades of horse artillery, with a corps of engineers; four regiments of hussars, and four of heavy cavalry; two regiments of foot guards, and ten of regular infantry, besides the landwehr; and forms a very efficient, and well drilled body of troops. This force was maintained at an expense considered rather burdensome to the nation. The subject has been much discussed in the meetings of the general states, and it is only lately that the army was placed on a permanent footing. In the general history we have often had occasion to allude to the gallantry and good conduct of the armies of Brunswick and Luneburg; and we can state with confidence, that they have not degenerated since the accession of the sovereign of these states to the crown of Britain. In the seven years' war, the Brunswick troops, and a Brunswick prince, were the saviours of the liberties of Germany, if not of Europe; and in every J I war in which England has been engaged since the success-ion, the Hanoverians have been ready to shed their best blood in her cause. At Gibraltar, and in the East Indies, their fame has been established; and while valour in the field and strict discipline in the camp continue to ...
