This information-packed second book in the Con Job series is about “the problem:” how to spot con artists, sociopaths and predators. It begins with a detailed list of their characteristics so that you can recognize them in your life.

This book identifies three categories of con artists, where they typically operate, and talks about the most common con job of all time, the infamous Ponzi Scheme. It looks at institutional con artists who hide out in banks, churches, schools, politics, media and the government, at male and female relational con artists, and those who prey on children and the elderly.

The last part talks about how con artists have infiltrated our physical environment, including climate change science, nuclear energy, farming and food distribution. It also looks at a special class of con artists, the Global Elite, talks about the role that they play in America’s history, and examines why and how they continue to influence it.
