Top 100 Universities in China - Rankings 1999 - 2014: Chinese University Guide Julie Zhu, Netbig
As China has undergone more than 30 years of market oriented reform, the role of university education has been fundamentally changed. University education, which was designed to train the very few, is now reaching the many. The competition between universities in securing funding and good students becomes keen. The government as an investor and the students as a consumer select colleges with vigor and great care. Colleges, viewed by many as the last strong hold of the central-planning economy, have become more aware of the impact of market force.

To help the ultimate consumer of education is our goal in publishing this Top 100 Universities in China - Rankings 1999 -2014. Especially, when in recent years, more and more foreign students from all the world go to China to study, how to choose and which chinese college to be chosen becomes more and more important. Hopefully, this book will give some insights to you.

Nevertheless, the book and the data shall not be used as the sole selection criterion in making decisions. Every university has now its own admission toolkits. Most of them are now available on the Internet. Much information could be obtained from those sources. The high school students also could get the consultation from their teachers, parents and friends. Our books and data, Universities in China serials, used with wise consultation, could serve as a useful guide in selecting a college in China.
