"NOTE: This guide is intended to supplement and enhance the original work of art." "BACKGROUND: To understand Eugene O'Neill, the man and the dramatist, it is necessary to know, in some detail, the O'Neill family background, since some of his plays and many of his characters are drawn from his own family life. Both his father, James O'Neill, and his mother, Ella Quinlan, were from Irish emigrant families who came to America during the potato famine. Though incredibly proud of their ancestry, they could boast of no titles or wealth in their immediate pasts. The Quinlan family was well off and sent Ella to a convent school where she received a good and "lady-like" education. The O'Neill family was miserably poor. After bringing his wife and eight children to the United States, the father abandoned them and returned to Ireland. This kind of shirking of family responsibility seems to have plagued the O'Neills through the next two generations. James O'Neill began his acting career, or, rather slipped into it, as an extra available for crowd scenes in any big spectacle that came through Buffalo. He made his living (fifty cents a day) working in a machine shop. In 1886, he gave this up and joined Edwin Forrest's touring company. He later appeared with the leading American actors, Joseph Jefferson and Edwin Booth. He had a part in Rip Van Winkle with Jefferson and played Othello to Edwin Booth's Iago, one night, and Iago to Booth's Othello, the next...." (from introduction)
