The Twisted Tree Mr Victor Roswell

Nineteen seventy four finds England in a period of political unrest. The hangman's noose is no longer a deterrent, and the criminal element has lost its fear of the law. The drug scene has become rampant, and our youth of today has literally gone to pot. Tom Pepper is an honest, hard working man who loves his wife and his two children. Working as a Private Investigator in Sheffield for almost thirty years, he has witnessed, and on several occurrences, been involved in some pretty dreadful cases. His emotions have been stretched to breaking point on too many occasions. His partner in crime is William 'Beano' Brookes, who over the years has become his most trusted companion, and close family friend. Beano has a heart of gold but rules with a fist of iron. His now infamous methods of interrogation leaves ample to be desired, but they invariably gain results. Toms' personal Holy Grail is a happy ending, or as he calls it...his elusive chicken's teeth. However, he is gradually beginning to doubt their existence. As partner's, they were ill prepared for what they had stumbled upon one cold winters morning...Friday 13 December 1974. But nobody saw it coming...not even the cops. Before this case, such gruesome atrocities that they were about to unveil, had been confined to the history books of World war two. These young, innocent girls and their families, did not deserve this. Both Beano and Tom had dealt with the despicable element in the past, but never of the magnitude that they were about to combat. Little did Tom know that this case, which was to be his last; would surpass all that had gone before.
