Attempts to escape one's past often bring the runner even closer to it. Such is the case with Anna, a deeply troubled, introspective woman who tries to avoid being sucked under the waves of grief by abandoning her former life. The further Anna travels, the nearer she grows to the truth about herself and the world she has carefully created. In the end, she must choose between what she knows is true and what is easier to believe. In this engaging, artistically rendered novella by Erin K. Rice, the reader journeys through twists and turns that are as rough and stunning as the Alaskan setting in which it takes place.
